Players gain experience points for combat, scientific discoveries, and learning more about Martian life. As players gain experience points, they can level up their character, unlock new combat skills and abilities, purchase new tools, and gain influence with other factions. These factions include: the Government, the U.S. Air Force, and international competitors. The game supports online multiplayer for up to 8 players. Gameplay Players choose between colonizing Mars and preserving Mars as a Martian sanctuary. As the player builds his base and expands, there will be three main phases: deployment, frontier, and colonization. During deployment, players have a limited number of resources to build their base, which consist of health, defense, and speed. As they build, players will be continuously attacked by rival factions and monsters. To defend their bases, players will build defensive fields to protect them, turrets, and aircraft. During the frontier phase, players will be allowed to create larger bases with a greater number of resources. Once the player hits the fourth phase, the colonizer phase, players will have unlocked more opportunities for economic, military, and scientific growth. Throughout the game, players will collect resources and the resources they require will vary based on their planet of origin. Players can choose to be Martians, who are Earth-like and rule on Mars with the intention of becoming Martians; or Americans, who are Earth-like and want to colonize Mars and take control of the Martian economy; or Russians, who are alien-like and want to create a Martian sanctuary that is the "only sanctuary on Mars." The player will be faced with numerous decisions throughout the game that may influence their progress. Development and release Surviving Mars was first announced at PAX East 2015.
